I am USF St Petersburg: Ryan Schumann

 Ryan Schumann

Ryan Schumann, a COE student majoring in Elementary Education came to the St. Petersburg area from Philadelphia, PA. He was attracted to the program because of the "good things he heard about it and its faculty." Interestingly, Ryan was a member of the Innovations Percussion ensemble, which won the 1995 World Championship in Percussion awarded by the Winter Guard International Organization. His specialty is marching percussion and cymbals. It is his love for music and this talent that he wishes to utilize with intermediate grade school children when he becomes a classroom teacher.

Business Hosts Noted Ethicist

 Robert E. Frederick, PhD

Last week the Program for Social Responsibility and Corporate Reporting, a Program of Distinction, welcomed renowned business ethics scholar Robert E. Frederick, PhD, to campus. Frederick is the Assistant Director of the Center for Business Ethics at Bentley College, and served as three-time chairperson at the Center for Business Ethics' national conference.

Frederick is the co-author of nine books and numerous articles on business and environmental ethics. While on campus, he met with faculty and MBA students from the Corporate Social Responsibility class to discuss future plans for the Center for Business Ethics, as well as his current papers and teaching experiences.

The Program for Social Responsibility and Corporate Reporting frequently brings in speakers from both academic and corporate institutions to discuss ethical corporate behavior. The next class will explore the implications of the Martha Stewart controversy.

Ripped from the headlines, our business students will be debating the Martha Stewart controversy to be sure another corporate V.I.P. doesn't appear on the horizon. Next Tuesday at 6 pm, you are welcome to join a Corporate Social Responsibility class to discuss the events, her alleged complicity and our responsibility as citizens. If you would like to attend, please contact Ron Hill, dean of the college of business.
