

St. Petersburg Campus Plans Outlined

President Cecil Mackey asked members of the St. Petersburg City Council last week "to consider the alternative futures of USF-St. Petersburg" and join him in "a cooperative effort" to find additional land for the University's Bayboro Campus.

Dr. Mackey told the Council that the present eleven-acre site of the St. Petersburg Campus will reach "a point of saturation" within the next five years and that to meet the higher educational needs of the area by 1978 new or expanded facilities must be found. In an oral and written presentation to the Council, he stated that student enrollments at the Bayboro Campus had tripled during the past five years and that almost 2800 students would be enrolled in 1978--the maximum number of students the existing site can adequately handle.

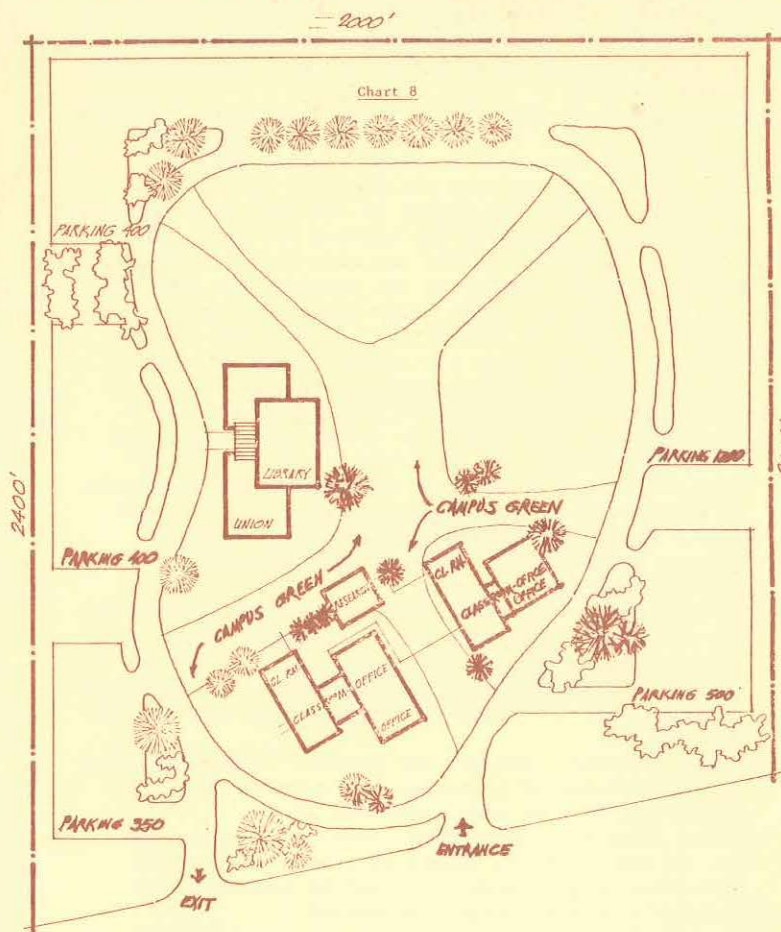

"If new or expanded facilities are made available by the fall of 1978, the St. Petersburg Campus of the University...could provide excellence in higher education to 7500 students--almost three times the number we would be able to serve at that time in existing facilities," Dr. Mackey said.

Dr. Mackey presented a diagram of a possible 100 acre, five-building, four-hundred thousand square foot facility costing about $24 million and indicated that if it were available by 1978 the University could increase the number of "complete degree program" offered in St. Petersburg from the present 13 to 20.

Dr. Mackey stressed that expanding the St. Petersburg Campus rather than developing a completely separate institution was "a wise investment for the area."

He noted one 1974-75 USF Legislative Budget Request included $75,000 for planning funds to study the future of the St. Petersburg Campus.

"The remarkable record of growth and development at USF-St. Petersburg is a tribute to the forethought of educational, civic and political leaders in St. Petersburg and underscores the potential for further expansion of public higher educational opportunities on this side of Tampa Bay," said Dr. Mackey.

This diagram was presented to the St. Petersburg City Council as an example of what an adequate USF-St. Petersburg facility might look like. On such a site and with about 400,000 square feet of space (estimated cost $24 million) USF could meet the projected educational needs of the 7,500 students for 1978.

Retraining Program Funded

Chancellor Robert Mautz has announced that allocations will be made shortly to state universities for an experimental program to assist tenured faculty members interested in retraining in another discipline. The theory, Mautz said, is that faculty members in a discipline which has a declining enrollment could with additional study be retrained for work in a related field faced with growing enrollments or in which teaching vacancies were expected.

The Legislature appropriated $45,000 for the experiment to determine whether the idea is feasible. The Board of Regents has asked universities to nominate candidates.

At INTERCOM press time, no formal action had been taken on USF's five nominees. As soon as such action is taken, INTERCOM will carry the information.

In each case the university will be expected to pay the faculty member's full salary, while the grant will be used to pay the costs of relocation, tuition and other expenses. The grant will be allocated on the basis of $3,000 per faculty member to be retrained, but each university may determine details, including the length of the retraining period, which cannot exceed the equivalent of three academic quarters.

Dr. Mautz sees the retraining program as a possible answer to problems arising from projected decreases in university enrollments in the early 1980's. If the experimental program proves successful, he said, the amount and number of faculty development grants probably would have to be increased.
