Hello and Welcome to a Computer Class for Graphic Design

First project, prior to re-redoing HDR and color enhance

This is a summer class, Summer A, to be clear. And it happens to be a class I need to take as part of Graphic Design pre-reqs.

Sadly, it's going a bit slow. Although, obviously, this is part of the learning curve, as you can't expect everyone to immediately comprehend everything you throw at them. I'm learning a few things, yes. But it isn't at quite the speed I was expecting.

There seems to be a very large range of skill amongst the students in this class; some know virtually nothing, while others seem to know Photoshop like the cliched 'back of their hand'. It's safe to say that I have a good amount of knowledge as compared to at least a few of my peers. Though clearly there are members of the class who know far more than I.

We've done one project thus far and have started a second.

Part of our first project - This is a robin's chest with severe color alteration.

About the blogger

I'm a student in the Honors program. I'm also one of the younger bloggers, an opinionated and sarcastic sophomore who is more interested in food (at times) than my studies for pre-majoring in Graphic Design. A mocha frappuccino and hair dying addict, it's a rare occurrence to see me with a solid natural color.
